HIS AWFUL THREAT,

That Uint About Another Story Brought the Welcome Quarter. "Gentlemen," said a smooth looking man to the crowd in the eight store, "I saw a funny thing today.

"What was it?" asked three of the crowd at the same time. The smooth looking man leaned gainst a showcase and began: , "I was going down the street this afternoon, and as I was passing the postoffice I heard quite a racket inside. I went in.

There was one of the big Irish women who seral out dancing around in the middle of the lobby with a pair of boxing gloves on her bands. She was hitting out in all directions and had already floored a couple of men. An alarm was sent in, and protty soon a police man came running down and arrested her. Just as he was about to hank her out to the patrol box that stands on the corner near by a dignified dooking man stepped out of the crowd and said, 'Ler that woman go.' 'Why should I let he, go?' asked the policeman. 'Because the United States government says that she can do what she has been doing.' 1 don't eaten on,' replied the policeman. 'Then read that!' should the dignifica tooking man, pointing to the sign on the wall. The policemen turned and read a sign, 'Letter Box.' The smooth looking men stopped herand looked around expectantly. To one laughed.

After a depressing silence for a couple of minutes one of the party said, "Well what's the joins?"
"Why," said the smooth looking man, "Letter hox—let her box, soo!

Let-her-ben, meaning the woman who had on the boxing gloves." There was a succession of dismal grooms, and every one save the clerk walked out into the night. After all had gone the smooth looking man turned to the clerk and said harriedly: "Say, boss, I didn't mean nothing by that.

only wanted to get a chance to talk with you in private." "What do you want?" asked the olerk. The smooth looking man approached him and said hearsely, "I only want a gnarter. "Well, you don't get it." The smooth looking man's face took on a hard engression. "Then I will tell you another story," he said firmly.

"Hot on your life, you won't!" shout ed the clerk, producing the desired coin And that is the way one mue got his rinks. - Britalo Express

At first eight it seems almost impos able that a thin only film resting of the tremendous sea waves could exercise a controlling influence over them. The display of resistless energy made by the breaking waves is so imposing and terrific that one might well believe no power less gigantic than their own could withstand them. The effect of the cit-resembles that of the apparently insignificant force of chemical combination holding in restraint the explosive energy of guupowder.

It is to German investigators that we owe the discovery of the active agent which enables cil to exercise its calming effect upon the sea. This agent is oldie neid, an ingredient found in lard, olivo oil and many other oils. Those oils that possess the largest proportion of cleic acid are the most effective in controlling the waves. It is through its gradual separation from the rest of the oil and its diffusion in the water that oleic acid acts. When a drop of oil rests upon water, the oil flattens out through the effects of its own weight. At the edge of the flattened disk of oil the oleic seid tends most rapidly to dissolve in the water, and the very net of dissolving evolves energy which causes the oil to spread still farther, thus keeping its edges constantly in contact with water that has not yet become charged with olde acid. This spreading continues with great rapidity until all of the olcie acid has been dissolved. Sometimes the tayer thus formed does not exceed a twelve-millionth of an inch in thickness! It would not be easy to emplain, without entering into technicalities, how the the rising of waves. The power of a wave is made up of the combined energy of all of the particles of water composing it, but every carticle at the surface of the wave is opposed by the force brought into play by the cloic acid, and thus the tendency of the surface of the wave to break is resisted. Of course the formation of the wave as a whole cannot be preventd by this mere surface resistance, but the character of the action going on m he surface is controlled by it, and that a the important thing so far as the
